

Covid-19: Practical Steps for the Community Housing Sector

The community housing sector is facing new and unprecedented challenges as it navigates the complexities of operating during COVID-19.

Providers are under pressure to maintain their viability, protect and maintain workforce and manage risks to ensure essential services continue to those most in need.

EY works closely with Federal and State Governments, who have released a range of stimulus, some of which is targeted at the community housing sector. However, the stimulus can be complex to administer and implement and for some providers, the stimulus alone may not be enough to weather the COVID-19 crisis and recover successfully.

Join our specialist panel as we discuss the practical steps community housing providers can take to navigate challenges around business viability, workforce and government stimulus. We will share practical insights and answer questions on the following:

- Sector outlook: How is the economic outlook impacting on community housing providers
- Business continuity and viability: How to manage your risks, working capital, cashflow and prioritise essential activities
- Workforce & wellbeing: How to protect and maintain the health, resilience and wellbeing of your workforce and leadership team
- Government stimulus: How to manage the complexities and tax implications of the stimulus and maximise the benefit to your organisation.
